GRANT WORKS MEN

SOUTH BEND TEAM ENJOYS PRACTICE AT SPRINGBROOK.

TOM WILLIAMS SLAB ARTIST

Anderson, Connors, Tiernan and Richardson Are Heavy Hitters—Moffit Leaves to Attend Funeral —Francis Umpires.

OPENING IS IMPORTANT.

The opening of the Central league season of 1906 in south Bend Thursday promises to be the banner opening date in Central league history. With both Terre Haute and South Bend stronger than last season, the initial game should prove to be an exciting battle.

All arrangements for the opening of the Central league season in South Bend have been completed and the contesting teams representing Terre Haute and this city will start the fight for the pennant in the presence of one of the largest crowds that has ever turned out at an opening day contest in the Central league, providing of course that the weather is right.

All doubt that the local team gathered by Grant is not as strong as the clubs of past seasons was dispelled last Saturday when the Grantites purveyed to Grand Rapids and gave the classmates a trimming to a tune of 6 to 2.

This game was probably the last practice previous to the game, took place yesterday at Springbrook park. Capt. Grant putting the 19 members of the squad through two hours of stiff work, the boys being instructed to take the game and to work as hard as if a championship contest was on.

Elmer Moffit was called to New Carlisle Sunday by the death of his father-in-law and was not present at the game yesterday. He will return to-day and will be ready to bring the fan fodder Bud Thursday against Terre Haute. The "Tots" are playing in fine form and have demonstrated their ability as ball players by defeating most of the teams in the Michigan state league. This will do the delivering work for the men from Terre Haute.

COOKING AS AN ART

MRS. HELEN ARMSTRONG GIVES DEMONSTRATION TO LADIES.

SAYS GAS IS IDEAL FUEL.

Noted Culinary Expert, Interviewed by Tribune Representative Tells How to Prepare Foods.

"You waste more gas than you realize." This was the startling statement made by Mrs. Helen Armstrong, the noted culinary expert, to about 50 ladies of this city who had been invited to listen in the Auditorium annex Monday afternoon. Mrs. Armstrong is being for her excellent cooking and manners among her pupils the best domestic science teachers in the country. She easily demonstrated to the ladies who heard her first lecture yesterday that she knew her business thoroughly.

Mrs. Armstrong possesses a pleasing personality and she has her hearers with her from start to finish. She is fast to demonstrate to the people that the ideal fuel is gas and from the many dainty dishes prepared in the based yesterday and afterward sampling by the ladies present, she should have no trouble in converting these ladies to will cling to the old fashioned method of cooking. She takes distinctly and clearly and explains each dish so perfectly that there can be no confusion in the minds of the hearers. She uses an ordinary gas range which occupies a position on the stage. The gas meter through which the range is supplying with fuel is in plain sight and she shows how to utilize every bit of heat coming from the gas. She cooks a whole dinner, enough for a family of six and consumed 7½ cents worth of gas. The menu consisted of roast lamb, potatoes, two or three kinds of vegetables and dessert.

Talks of Her Work.

Mrs. Armstrong granted a representative of The Tribune an interview at the close of her lecture. She is a delightful talker of her work, her methods and the results she endeavors to attain. Her first aim is to teach the art of preparing cooked foods properly in order that their full food value shall be conserved and at the same time make them as appetizing as possible. She also demonstrates the value of artificial gas as a fuel.

"Gas is the ideal fuel for the art of food gas as fuel," she said, "because they consider it expensive, but it really is not. It is expensive only when those who use it do not understand how to be economical. There are many ways in which gas may be made a great saver of money. For instance, a steel ring is remembered to cost matches are cheaper than gas. By this I mean that in some of a Marvel has demonstrated its task the gas should be turned off and relighted when wanted again.

Then there are ways of arranging the menu so as to use as little gas as possible. For instance, when roasted meat is to be the chief feature of the dinner the other dishes should be such as can be cooked in the oven, thereby making it unnecessary to use both the oven and the other burners to prepare the meal. Many people do not know the best way to use the oven. Food in the oven does as well as they do on top of the stove. It is these seemingly minor rules that count in reducing the gas bill and the careful housewife should pay particular attention to them.

Advantages of Gas as Fuel.

"The advantages accruing from the use of natural gas as a fuel are many. The days of the old fashioned stoves, the modern stoves are numbered for in all the large cities now gas is the main fuel. It is not only more convenient but, if properly used, cheaper than wood or coal. It also has a steady heat which means better cooking. It is clean—nothing very much from natural gas in this respect. In emergencies it is ready to hand. In fact, fast being she is done on the modern gas ranges; they are economical and are arranged to suit the needs of any family."

Mrs. Armstrong will be here all of this week. This morning she lectured on the preparation of a dinner. This afternoon she led the Auditorium annex filled with ladies all anxious to learn. Each step in the preparation of the soups, sauces, meats, vegetables, salads and cakes is explained as it performed. Every element in the menu is explained and the reasons for which she employs it. Her lessons are so arranged as to cover the whole range of cookery and install in the minds of her pupils a knowledge of practical cookery.

TRIO OF GREAT BALL MANAGERS KNOWN FROM ONE END OF THE COUNTRY TO THE OTHER

CLARK GRIFFITH.

JOHN J. McGRAW.

FRED CLARKE.

Three men whose careers have spelled success on the baseball field are John McGraw, of the New York Nationals; Clark Griffith, of the New York Americans, and Fred Clarke, of the Pittsburg Nationals.

While each of these managers has his own peculiar style of training his players, yet the methods of each so closely resemble the system used by the others that they all work practically along the same line.

There is no lagging in the men who play under their management. It is not due to chance that the New York Nationals have developed into a good bunch of players. The men are taught to fight for every point in the game—nothing is overlooked that may bring victory to their side. And the same can be said for the other pennant winners. In the development of players these managers stand in the foremost rank. Each is a fine judge of a player's ability and understands the art of bringing out the strong points and developing the weak points.

Recognizing merit in young players and developing it to the point of perfection are two strong features in the careers of all three of the men whose pictures are shown in the accompanying group.
