GOOD EVENING.

CUBA'S NATAL DAY.

May 20 is Cuba's day of independence for then her new republic was born. The first year of the life of this republic has passed under the most favorable conditions and the people of the island celebrated the anniversary on Wednesday with the bombing of passers, the waving of flags and processions, cheers, speeches and fireworks after the manner of an old fashioned Fourth of July in the United States.

Business, it is reported was practically suspended in all parts of the republic and the people all gave up the day to rejoicing. This is a good omen for the perpetuity of the republic. The Cubans have shown under the wise leadership of the patriotic and capable Palma that they are able to take care of themselves and as long as they continue in the way they have begun, they will prosper and maintain their own government. All they have to do to succeed is to pattern after their foster parent the great republic of the United States and not after their fretful and quarreling sisters, the republics of South America.

Cuba has great possibilities. She has abundant resources within herself to support herself as well as deriving great benefit from an export trade that is all the time developing under the banner of peace and a thorough cultivation of her fertile soil. It was through long years of tribulation that Cuba has reached this honorable and independent status, where she is able to conduct her own affairs, and it is sincerely to be hoped that her day of prosperity so auspiciously begun, will expand in light and influence until Cuba shall become one of the substantial governments of the earth.

THE BETTER AMERICAN.

President Roosevelt was a pretty good all-around American before he started out on this springtime trip for the west. He no doubt knows the country and its people in all phases better than any other man who has occupied the chief magistrate's chair. From the halls of statesmanship and the glamour of high best society of the eastern cities, he was thoroughly acquainted with the rough life on the western plains and in the western mountains. Yet the president acknowledges that he has learned a great deal on his tour and returns to his trauma duties at Washington, a much better American for thus having formed a new acquaintance with the people.

Until the new trip he was even the marvelous development of the Pacific states, since he was but thirty the president says in one of his late speeches at a reception in a California town, that he had formed no true conception of what a wonderful transformation had been going on in that part of the country. He was justly proud he said of the achievements that had been wrought in a few years and depicted the people upon the success they had achieved in reclaiming old lands and building up his cities. This he said, was due to hard and well directed labor, and further that men who had accomplished so much by persistent work were really to be envied. They had done their work well, and that is every instance where work is honorable is what counts.

Thus in the president gaining valuable information by going about and studying the conditions of the country as they actually exist. He is not only doing himself but the whole nation a good service for being a practical and an honest man, he puts his knowledge to good use in serving the people's interest. It is also a good thing for the people in the remote part of the land that they are enabled to meet their president face to face and hear his honest talk. Roosevelt is as good an American as the country ever had and he is growing better all the time.

An unprincipled student, who acts as a newspaper correspondent, it has been discovered was wholly responsible for the report that went out of the Michigan university at Ann Arbor, to the effect that a certain professor was instructing a class of young men in the secret art of making love and proposing marriage. It turns out that the whole thing was a fake, and the young man has been summarily bounced from the institution. There are many other unscrupulous newspaper reporters, hands and agents of colleges who should be served in the same manner. They are dangerous individuals and make a whole lot of trouble in the world.

The snow is 10 feet deep in Montana and a great amount of suffering is entailed by reason of the severity of the weather. The loss of stock is estimated at $500,000 in value and the season's fruit crop is about all destroyed. There are floods in various parts of the country, but extreme dry weather is in this region prevails to a large extent in the east and west, and the work of the farmer has been greatly retarded thereby. With improved conditions which are pretty sure to come in a few days the season may yet develop into a fruitful one, as there is plenty of time for crops to grow between now and the time for harvesting.

Norman E. Mack, of Buffalo, N. Y., is a member of the national democratic committee. He suggests a sliding financial scale for the next democratic platform upon which the members of both wings of the party can safely unite. It is to the effect that congress shall exercise the function of deciding the ratio between silver and gold, as values fluctuate. What a nice little tester board that would will be for the democrats. First the Bryanites go up then the Clevelandites. That is about the attitude of the democratic party of to-day. Continually wobbling all the time hoping, to shake principle, no solid foundation to rest upon.

Senator Hanna shows his true Americanism in the matter of his daughter's wedding gown. He has decided that the material shall be American made and all the work connected with the construction of the garment be done in this country. He places no limit on the expense, but stoutly affirms that no foreign texture or foreign labor shall enter into a make-up of the trousseau. Good for Marcus.

TRIBUNE TRIFLES.

The weather man continues to use the words "probable" and "probably" with the same old result.

Do the people who are now complaining about the heat, the sunshine and the drouth, ever stop to think they were just a few with their thoughtless a few weeks ago about the floods, the rain and the frost?

An Old Favorite

THE POPULAR CREDO

By Charles P. Shiras.

DIMES and dollars! dollars and dimes!
An empty pocket's the worst of crimes!
If I have a friend, when, why gives
Such a friend?
Transmits the beggar into the dust!
Promotes the rogue's ends! Is a squalid—
Nay,
Is an even wier kick him for failing!
If a man is up, oh! lift him higher,
Your soul's for sale, and he's a buyer!
Dimes and dollars! dollars and dimes!
An empty pocket's the worst of crimes!

I know a one, the worthy pouch,
It does hopes are built on a maiden's
truth;
But the maiden will break her vows
for a time
For a wiser suitor whose claims are these:
A fellow heart and an empty head,
A face well tinged with the brandy
red,
A soul well imbued in Satan's school,
And cash, sweet cash, he knoweth the rule:

Dimes and dollars! dollars and dimes!
An empty pocket's the worst of crimes!

I know a bold and an honest man
Who strives to live on the Christian plan,
But poor he is, and poor will be,
A scorned and hated wretch is he;
At home, he meeteth a starving wife,
Abroad, he incurs a loper's life,
Thus struggle against fearful odds,
Who will not bow to the people's gods!
Dimes and dollars! dollars and dimes!
An empty pocket's the worst of crimes!

So get ye wealth! no matter how!
No questions asked of the rich, I trow!
Let the poor toil, let the poor die,
Giving it all to a rogue and lie!
Join the Church, and never forsake
her,
Learn to cant, and insult your Maker;
Do anything, but be honest and poor,
But don't be poor! remember for ever,
Dimes and dollars! dollars and dimes!
An empty pocket's the worst of crimes!

CONTEMPORARY COMMENT.

Hayes, the Hand Shaker.

[Kansas City Journal.]

Mr. Hayes was the greatest handshaker of all the presidents. He always took the initiative. He had the art of making the particular man with whom he was shaking hands feel that he was the one individual the president had come to visit. In 1879 he visited Kansas and was received everywhere with great acclaim. At Hutchinson a large crowd had gathered to greet him. In Hutchinson at the time was one Bill Graham, a rattlesnake hunter, who in the use of intoxicating liquor, Bill could get drunk without knowing what it was all about. He fell in line and gradually approached the president, who was standing on the lower step of his car and shaking hands with all who came. As Bill came near the president reached over, grasped him by the hand, shook it vigorously, and said: "My friend, I am delighted to see you." "Thash all right, pard," said Bill, "but lemme tell you thash the advantage of me." Hayes turned to his companion and said: "I never saw a man who is not the slightest humor in the situation. But how such a thing would delight Roosevelt! If Roosevelt should have an encounter of this kind he would tell about it from one end of the country to the other and laugh every time until he had to wipe his glasses.

The Hon. Grover Cleveland.

[Louisville Courier-Journal.]

When, after an unbroken silence of years, he decides to speak, he is not to be prevailed upon to speak in 1896 except to decline a sacrificial nomination—Mr. Cleveland begins to peep over the garden wall and take note of things outside, those familiar with his peculiar methods know for sure that there was a reason. But, when a clamp of idle millionaires got up a club, democratizing the name of Tilden in its baptism, and Mr. Cleveland, unfazed by the presence of David B. Hill, consented this club by his presence, doubt as to the particular hen that had laid was dispelled. The flirtation with Zimmany followed.

Having thus made his re-entry upon the stage of affairs—another farewell tour of the Thiel variety—our model of civic virtue, our unselfish secretary, only the classic shades of Princeton and coveting alone the secretary's chair, he proceeds to make a series of public appearances admirably suited to the purpose of pointing the moral of his surpassing superiority and disinterestedness. Having sufficiently prepared the public in Hill to speak from the same platform with him, it was not surprising that he should mourn at the funeral of his other implacable enemy, Hewitt. The Booker Washington speech as a trial in 1902 was the work of an old hand. The Louisville journey was a can-stalk. All this, it will be observed, has been done without getting into place—the literary bureau adroitly at work—Mr. Cleveland in the good old man, shunning publicity, seeking nothing, not even delighting to utter the one word "no," which would have stopped all agitation, here silenced all criticism.

LADIES GIVE BIG MUSICALE

Woman's Literary Club Closes Season With Delightful Event.

The Woman's Literary club entertained its friends yesterday afternoon at the Baptist church with a delightful musicale embracing the works of various German composers. The programme was one of rare excellence and was executed with finesse and artistic skill. The numbers from the "Messiah" by Mrs. William H. Swintz, Miss Gertrude Toepp and Mrs. Oscar Durrant were particularly well rendered, and were enthusiastically received, as was also Prof. W. Preston MacHenry's number from "Elijah," which afforded ample scope for the exhibition of his fine baritone voice and his broad, effective use of it.

Miss Toepp always a favorite, sang exquisitely "O Sublime Poesia," and when recalled graciously responded. Miss Carolyn Wheldright's organ numbers gave evidence of her skill and execution and her selections were calculated to bring out the sweetness and power of the instrument. Mr. Louis Eibel appeared twice upon the programme and his numbers were most happily chosen and magnificently rendered with both a force and a delicacy of touch and expression as characteristic of the talented young artist. His response to an encore was unavoidable, as the audience insisted upon his reappearance.

Prof. Frederic Ingersoll played with his accustomed smoothness and sympathy and also directed the difficult and artistic work of the string quartet, which performed its part to be in this city and demonstrating as it did just the finished tone of the school. The quartet was composed of Miss Allonia, first violin; Mr. Hal Vandikes, second violin; Mr. August Hoerstmann, viola; Mr. Ingersoll, violoncello.

The musicale was in charge of Mrs. George M. Studebaker, who rendered all of the organ accompaniments and gave a total organ number at the close. Miss Allonia accompanied on the violin. The entertainment was the closing event of the season for the club and was a fitting termination of a successful and very profitable literary season. The club is the oldest women's literary organization in South Bend.

"Somewhere."

Somewhere the roses are brave and red,
And the lilies are sweet, and spread
A wistful perfume that scents the day
And clings to sephyrs that cross away
When night comes slowly and bids them stay,
A wonderous fragrance the blossoms bear—
And wouldn't you like to be there?

Somewhere the meadows are stretching green,
As clear as jewels, and soft and clean,
And somewhere the sweet bobolinks sing
That and and beckon when breezes blow.
Somewhere the meadows—But don't you know
The tone and tang of the bracing air?
And wouldn't you like to be there?

Somewhere that reaches a country road,
With crickets chanting a twilight ode;
Bending branches bend to paint a shade
Where moonbeams glimmer and gleam and fade,
And will-o'-the-wisps in the distance wade.
Somewhere the freckles flash and flare—
And wouldn't you like to be there?

Somewhere—You know it; O who but holds
A memory that his heart enfolds—
A memory of the bearing trees
And soothing song of the honeybees
And all of the boy-day melodies!
Somewhere you lived in it all—somewhere—
And wouldn't you like to be there?
—E. S. Nesbit in Chicago Tribune.
