

SOCIAL AND OTHER INTERESTS OF WOMEN

The great American flag will be featured throughout the decorations which will be used for the much talked of dispensary ball on next Monday evening at Place hall. In keeping with the spirit of this time, the music also will be of a patriotic nature. No more appropriate setting for an affair of this nature could be imagined than one which is arranged to appeal to the loyal American sentiment which lives in everyone. Patriotism and the purpose for which the dispensary ball is being given go hand in hand.

Miss Louise Studebaker, who is in charge of one of the stunts that will intersperse the dancing, announces a "cakewalk special". Who the dancers of this will be left to the guests who may be able to identify them behind the eye masks that the young couple will wear. The young woman and the partner that she has chosen are among South Bend's best dancers and the stunt is expected to create much interest.

The dispensary ball has become one of the main topics of conversation wherever society people meet. At teas, lunches and dinners the ball is discussed with enthusiasm and keen interest. Those who have charge of the affair have been assured of a large out-of-town attendance.

Invitations have been issued by members of the Beta Omicron chapter of the Phi Delta Kappa fraternity for their formal anniversary ball, to be held at the Oliver hotel, Wednesday evening, April 11. The affair will be the most elaborate of all the dancing parties which the fraternity has given this season and promises to be most attractive. The invitations are tastefully made up in black and white and the same combination will be carried out in the decorations of the ball room. Messick's orchestra will play the program of dances for the evening.

Your Wedding Day

And the Famous Men and Women Who Have Shared It With You.

By Mary Marshall

April 3—Thomas Adolphus Trollope and Theodosia Garrow.

(Copyright, 1917, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Seldom has a man married such a delightfully cosmopolitan bride as did Thomas Adolphus Trollope just 63 years ago today. For Theodosia Garrow possessed the beauty and mysticism of her high caste—Brahmin grandmother, the intellectual keenness and persistence of her Jewish mother, with the one-quarter leavening of an aristocratic English grandfather.

Theodosia Garrow had attained some distinction as a writer even before her marriage in her 23rd year to Thomas Adolphus Trollope, celebrated brother of Anthony Trollope, the novelist. This marriage took place the third day of April, 1848.

At the British legation in Florence. Thereafter the Trollopes took up their residence in Florence and the Italian influence added another element in the charming medley of Mrs. Trollope's character.

The home of the Trollopes in Florence was known as the Villino Trollope and there was created one of the best known salons in Italy.

Among those who frequented the home and among friends of Trollope were such well-known literary folk as Browning, Dickens, G. H. Lewes, George Eliot, Owen Meredith, Tennyson, Lowell and Landor.

As time went on both Mr. and Mrs. Trollope became alienated from their native England and more reduced to the stage when a little will jelly when dropped on ice.

The old stand-by, rhubarb pie, is delicious when properly made. The difficulty is to make it so that the juice does not soak the under-crust. Here is one good way always found successful by an experienced cook: Chop the rhubarb and use nearly as much sugar as rhubarb. To two cups of rhubarb and a scant two cups of sugar add one well-beaten egg in which a teaspoonful of flour is rubbed smooth. Mix all thoroughly and bake between two crusts. The egg and flour thicken the rhubarb juice so that there is less likelihood than usual of its soaking the crusts.

As to garden sauce, it can best be made in a casserole. Pare and cut the rhubarb, then to a quart of it add a cupful of sugar and a half cupful of water. Cover tight and cook in the oven slowly until tender.

Tarts can be made by filling an uncooked crust with rhubarb that has been stewed with tender and sweetened with brown sugar. Strips of the crust can be placed zigzag over the top of the dish baked until the crust is brown. The crust strips may be omitted—or the upper crust of the rhubarb pie—and a meringue may be added and browned after the crust is cooked.
