PURDUE FILLING IMPORTANT MISSION

HIGH MEASURE OF SUCCESS SHOWN BY GRADUATES.

FOUNDED BY A HOOSIER

Citizen of Tippecanoe County Gave $150,000 and 100 Acres of Land for Establishment of University, With State Assistance.

BY A. M. EVANS,
Of the Chicago Record-Herald.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Nov. 18.—Purdue university is the Indiana state institute of technology. It was established under the act of congress of 1862 making land grants for colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts, and it was named after John Purdue, a citizen of Tippecanoe county, who contributed $150,000 and 100 acres of land toward the foundation. In consideration of the gift the legislature by an act passed in 1888, gave the institution the name of Purdue university and pledged the faith of the state "that such name and style shall be the permanent designation of said institution, without addition thereto or modification thereof."

It offers instruction in agriculture, applied science, pharmacy and mechanical, civil, electrical and chemical engineering, and in connection with these branches of technical instruction in English, mathematics, modern languages, history, economics, education and military science.

The university is located about a mile from the business center of the town in Lafayette on the opposite bank of the Wabash river. Its campus contains 45 buildings, most of them stone, fourteen laboratories and shops, and a power house and manufacturing plant. Laggards have no chance—the courses are too stiff. Visitors always remark the air of great activity at Purdue. The students hustle to classes, hustle to the athletic fields, hustle home, and they act as if they felt regarded as one distinguishing feature of the university. When they play they play as energetically as they work, as witness a long record of athletic achievement.

Has Big Growth.

During the last decade the university has grown rapidly, and that is little short of phenomenal. In 10 years it has more than doubled in size. It has an aggregate enrollment of 1,474 (1910-11), and its graduates number 1,000 in the last decade, against 500 who graduated in the last 10 years. Upon the alumni 4,250 degrees have been conferred. Since it first opened its doors approximately 12,000 students have attended Purdue, and the yearly roll-call continues progressively uniform in the early years. Its first graduating class in 1873 had only one member; last year, 291 bachelor degrees were conferred.

The growth from 1900 to 1910 is indicated by the following table:

	1900.	1910.
Members of the faculty	92	140
Number of students	1,000	1,474
Value of property	$776,000	$1,500,000
Number of principal buildings	9	22
Income—
For dept. of instruction	$121,784	$84,900
For agricultural institute	4,000	10,000
For farmers' institutes	2,000	10,000

Accompanying this growth, new departments have been opened and admission requirements have been increased.

The support of the university is through legislative appropriations, by appropriations from the federal government amounting to $60,000 a year, and by the income from the endowment of $240,000 granted by the federal government and held in trust by the state.

In common with most of the Indian colleges, Purdue has turned out its share of famous graduates. Among the alumni are George Ade, science '87, author and playwright, and John T. McCutcheon, science '89, cartoonist and author. George and Ben McCutcheon, brothers of John T., were also students at the university. So were Booth Tarkington at one time. Charles Major is also numbered among the Purdue men. Ade and he are on the board of trustees now. Laffayette still shoulds in the trips which Ade and the Tippecanoe club of the University Club of the university gave three performances of Ade's "County Chairman," and in the audience, it is said, were several who could have sung the lines and cues from memory. The older graduates sang their bonds solemnly in discussing the literary contingent. They convey the idea that Ade and the three McCutcheons were students at the university when the stage sent every Friday night and throw the bricks into the river.

Athletic Spirit Strong.

The athletic spirit is strong at Purdue. A memorial gymnasium was erected through popular subscription in 1894, in memory of Frank Cavanaugh, a student member, who had died from injuries in a railroad accident in the Indianapolis yards in October, 1893. Nearly every afternoon five or six football or baseball teams are on the gridiron or diamond. Every Saturday night a tournament is held in the gymnasium. The record of the teams is summarized by Mr. Nicol as follows:

In baseball Purdue tied with Illinois for the championship in 1907-08; in 1909-10 it won the championship; in 1910-11 it lost to Illinois by one game; and last year it again stood second in the conference, losing by one game to Illinois.

In basketball Purdue tied with Minnesota for the championship last year; in 1909-10 it stood third; in 1910-11 it stood second.

In football last year, Chicago was the only team to defeat Purdue. The Purdue team was prohibited from throwing the banner, bearing the death of Prof. Stone from a flag stretch on the Chicago high school field. This gave Chicago nine points without a contest, adding to victory by five points. In the conference game last year Purdue stood second. This year the team promises to be coming fore and a new track with concrete curbing has been laid.

In cross country running Purdue ranked fourth in the conference meet last year. In the conference track and individual honors it will send a strong team to Iowa City Nov. 24 for the annual cross country meet of the "big eight" conference.

The campus has two distinct sections. The older part, containing the first buildings has a remarkably fine evergreen hedge that winds from the campus gates up to the old halls held in memory of Purdue's dead. The newer part have been erected engineering buildings, the electrics shops and the laboratories, while across the road from the old buildings are the power plant, the shops and the government station. Near the center of the campus is Ellis-Fowler hall, containing an auditorium in which the public exercises of the university are held, and which is used by celebrated artists and orchestras.

In discussing present tendencies at Purdue, President Winthrop Ellsworth Stone dwelt on the effort to prevent student amusements and recreation from interfering with scholarship.

RAIL CONTROL RIGHT DECLARES R. S. LOVETT

Directing Genius of Harriman Lines Gives Approval of Plan.

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—Former Judge Roberts S. Lovett, one of the foremost authorities on railways in the country, yesterday made known his views on the advisability of federal control of such corporations to the extent suggested by President Taft's stocks and bonds board. Mr. Lovett, who is the directing genius of the Harriman lines, set forth his opinions in a pamphlet which includes his testimony before the interstate commerce commission, and pointed the way to many reforms against stock watering and overvaluation.

The four principal recommendations of the interstate commerce commission, the opinions of Judge Lovett on these points as set forth in his pamphlet were as follows:

No. 1. On federal supervision and control of stocks and bonds, Judge Lovett said:

"I am very strongly of the opinion that if congress has the power under the constitution, such regulation should be made by the national government rather than by the state governments. It made certainly."

No. 2. On special valuation on railroad properties by the government:

"I think such a valuation, if accurate, would affect materially the value of securities now outstanding. It would enhance the value of some and depress the value of others in the hands of owners, but otherwise the government has nothing to gain by the individual valuation of the property of a corporation. As to finale issues, I take it that the limit of the government's interest is to prevent the issue of what are commonly called 'footlines' securities or securities issued without adequate consideration."

No. 3. On capitalizations of additions and betterments:

"Believing as I do that transportation rates should be regulated by the amount of money invested, I think the question involved is one of internal management of the corporation for its directors to determine, and not affect the public or the government."

No. 4. On the advisability of limiting the issuance of capital stock at par for money or property of the actual value of the money or property received:

"I am strongly in favor of the issue of stock without par value, whether issued for money or property. Certificates should be issued for the shares, showing the number of shares to which the holder owns, but not the value thereof. The certificate and the share would then represent the truth, whereas the present method of attribuing a value to the share or share of stock is deceptive, misleading and very often an unmitigated fraud."

BONEHEAD BANQUET NEAR-DEAR AFFAIR

POSEUR RENEGS WHEN THE GAME WARDEN ENTERS.

United States Money is More Valuable Than Kingly Emoluments to Dr. Louis J. Smith.

A near-dear deer banquet was held by the Bonehead club in the Oliver hotel last night, at which, for a time at least, Dr. Louis J. Smith provided both viands and villiany. The "piece-de-resistance" was a choice specimen of the antlered herd, which Dr. Smith was alleged to have slaughtered in Michigan. In recognition of his prowess, Dr. Smith was given a separate table by the guests, presented with gifts and crowned with laurelator.

The banquet was well under way when Game Warden Burns, of Niles, Mich., appeared and placed Frank E. Hering, of Chicago, Grand Master of the Bad Order of Eagles, and president of the club, under arrest for violating the game laws. Mr. Hering clinched himself with documentary evidence that he had not slain the deer. The blame then fell upon Dr. Smith who immediately confessed his delinquency. Mr. Hering forgave his abductor and he was stripped of his honors. However, he saved himself a fine, a letter was produced showing the deer was shot by Mr. Hering in Vancouver, B. C. The kingly emoluments were then bestowed upon J. M. Studebaker, jr., and J. P. Goddin.

The next banquet will be held Dec. 15, with Messrs. Hogan, Studebaker and Goddin in charge.
